Brownes Score Wiih Unique Bloch Comedy

By Margaret Fortier

The premiere of "The Princess Who Wouldn't Say Die," by Bertram Bloch, was produced at the Theatre of the Golden Bough on August seventh, ninth, and tenth, under the direction of Ellen Van Volkenburg and Maurice Browne. The students of the Summer School of the Theatre of the Golden Bough were the players. Judging from the reception of the play at all three performances—and the fact that the house was entirely sold out each time—the students must have felt pleased with themselves and satisfied that the instruction gained during the course was worth many times the time and effort it cost them.

Winsome—is the word that kept coming to my mind during the whole performance—a winsome feminine thing (if plays have gender). One came from it smiling and wishing he could see it again. The Theatre itself seemed especially built for the play—or the play written especially for the Theatre—so harmonious was the whole. The settings in themselves were wonders of color and clever illusions (some of the audience became afflicted with mal de mer during the deck scene, and you verily tasted the salt from Davy Jones' locker) The busy, blithesome pages as props made scene shifting as much a joy to the audiences as the play itself.

Gertrude Gerrish as the Princess was just as charming as the hoyden playmate of the Army as she was when everything ended happily and she was given to the h-h-h-hero, John Shielding, by her naive, imbecile but lovable father, the King. William Shepard, who played the King, had the most difficult part to play. Perhaps he won't like it and I have never seen him off the stage, so perhaps he will forgive me, but he was a most perfect imbecile and, as imbeciles sometimes do, he saved the situation by his very imbecility.

So attractive was Davy Jones' locker and such a genial host was Edward Kuster, that some of the perils of sea voyages have been forever banished from the minds of some of us. The formidable Army who shrieked at the sight of a cat, the doughty Sailors, the ferocious Pirates, the nymphs of Davy Jones' locker, the curious Courtiers, and all the other "slight improbables" of this "slight improbability" gave us a happy evening. We would like to see it again.

Miss Monterey Meets Miss California

Miss Helen Wright, daughter of Mayor B. F. Wright, was selected to represent Monterey Peninsula's spirit of the Serra Pilgrimage as "Miss Monterey" at the luncheon held at the St. Francisco hotel, San Francisco, yesterday in honor of "Miss California," or Miss Fay Lampier, who was adjudged the most beautiful California girl at the recent Santa Cruz beauty contest.

Arrangements for the participation of a girl from the Peninsula in this affair were made by the co-operative efforts of the Serra Pilgrimage committee and the Monterey Chamber of Commerce.

"Miss Monterey" was costumed in the Spanish fashion of Old California. The materials of her attire were California grown and manufactured.

The city board of trustees, sitting as a board of equalization, met last Tuesday morning at the city hall. The assessed valuations of several pieces of property in various parts of Carmel were raised, and further raises are contemplated in connection with other properties. A growing city needs more money.

The Monterey Union high school fall term opens next Monday. The local public school (Sunset) opens Monday, August 25.

California's Chain of Missions

The Serra Pilgrimage celebration in Carmel, Monterey and Pacific Grove and the preparations therefor makes of particular interest at this time the following list of twenty-one California missions founded and administered by Father Junipero Serra, presidente. Princess Salome Wins Her Audience at the Golden Bough Theatre

"The Princess Salome," by Dan Totheroh, had its world's premiere last night at the Theatre of the Golden Bough. The play is centered around Salome, a young, naive child of fourteen. Unlike Wilde's heroine, she is a very human little girl, the kind that might be found anywhere. Totheroh has taken away all the unpleasantness that is usually thought of regarding Salome.

The play is in five scenes and the spell of the original atmosphere is maintained beautifully throughout. The play moved swiftly and the dramatic interest was sustained to the last curtain. The drama builds up to a seeming climax in the third scene, in the dungeon, and from there it mounts to the real climax in the last act where Salome receives the head of John the Baptist.

The play was personally directed by Mr. Totheroh and the production showed the capability of the young playwright as a director. Under his direction the actors painted their pictures as thoroughly and convincingly as he painted them in his play. Mr. Totheroh is endowed with that rare genius of making his people human.

The title role was played by Ruth Kuster, the popular young Carmel actress. She was particularly convincing when portraying the childish moods of Salome. Her girlish form in the exotic costumes of Salome was delicately beautiful.

Herodias, the queen, was portrayed by Minetta Ellen. Miss Ellen's performance was at all times thoroughly convincing, giving just the proper contrast to her unsophisticated daughter. She was especially good as the wily mother in her scenes with Salome.

Phyllis Blake thrilled the audience with her portrayal of a woman taken in adultery.

Elsa Heyman and Dorothea Johnston were ideally cast as Salome's personal handmaidens.

Morris Ankrum gave not only a profound interpretation of the fanatical prophet John, but also endowed him with Christ-like tolerance to his oppressors. "Forgive them for they know not what they do," seemed to be the keynote of his character. The power of his characterization came to an impressive culmination in the dungeon scene when he denounced the ways of Herod.

The difficult role of the lascivious Herod was very convincingly portrayed by Laurence Tulloch. He made Herod so repulsive and decadent that it seemed to permeate the whole theatre. Mr. Tulloch played his scene with Salome and Herodias quietly and impressively, suggesting the majesty of the oriental ruler, but rose to great emotional heights in the dungeon scene when he collasped under John's accusations.

The half-witted Peter, John's faithful companion, was well played by Carol Aronivici. It was a difficult part but it was capably handled by young Aronivici.

George Ball played the mad Jew in the dungeon and gave the right note of forlornness and blasphemy, cursing John and his high ideals.

Old Anthony, another follower of John, was played by Edward Kuster. He made the old man live. Mr. Kuster also wrote the interesting incidental music.

Paul Heyman played the grim executioner. Mr. George Ward played the Captain of the Guard. Patty Johnson and Betty Busby played Salome's little pages. The other smaller parts were all done well and at all times were in the picture.

The lovely sets were executed by Rose Bogdohoff, also the costumes. Both lent the correct touch to the production, giving the exotic and langorous atmosphere of the orient that was necessary to the success of the vehicle.

All in all, Mr. Totheroh has given in his "Princess Salome" a rare and original gem to the theatre of America.

Rotarians View Carmel San Simeon Highway

Last Sunday, under the auspices of the Monterey Peninsula and San Luis Obispo rotary clubs, a party of over sixty persons from Monterey, San Luis Obispo, Santa Maria and Salinas went on an inspection tour of the southern end of the Carmel-San Simeon highway. It was an interesting and educational journey.

For Sunday, the 24th, the Monterey club has invited all those interested to inspect the northern end of the highway. It is planned to house the visitors Saturday night in Carmel, then depart early for the Big Sur and district south of there, lunch at Pfeiffer's and then return to the Peninsula.

A Distinguished Friend

Friend William Richardson, Governor of the sovereign State of California, "enjoyed" several very active days on Monterey Peninsula this week. The affairs in which he took an active part included a review of the national guard troops at Camp Del Monte on Wednesday afternoon, a banquet in his honor, given by Monterey's hospitable mayor, Benjamin F. Wright, at the Hotel Del Monte in the evening, a Rotarian luncheon on Thursday, and later a motor trip to Salinas.

Those present at the banquet were: General Joseph A. Kuhn, General J. J. Boree, General R. H. Middlestadt, Colonel H. J. Breese, Colonel A. S. Eddy, Colonel David P. Barrows, Colonel Roger S. Fitch, Colonel Charles S. Lincoln, Fred A. Treat, W. L. Overstreet, T. A. Work, Alex Griffin, A. W. Furlong, Carmel Martin, W. G. Hudson, L. D. Lacey, and Benjamin F. Wright.

Friday morning found the Governor at historic Colton Hall, presiding at the trials of those who failed to raise whiskers for display during Pilgrimage week. Fines totaling $36 were collected. General J. J. Boree was luncheon host at Del Monte.

CONVENIENT ETHICS

Speaking of ethics, it is a widely accepted truism that many men change their standards of ethics after they have accomplished or obtained what they set out after. Instances are not rare where the owners of fortunes accumulated by the most reprehensible and detestable of methods apparently become models of probity shortly after they get what they want. If they announce their rectitude frequently enough, it is accepted in time by a large share of the public, which begins to look upon the former malefactors as pillars of society. This funny old world, with its supposed mass sense of justice, occasionally admires the end, if it is successful, and forgets the means of its attainment.

BEWARE THE POLITICAL PIE EATERS

There are styles in politics as in everything else. The politician always has his weather-eye out for new fields to exploit; hence the proposal that crops up intermittently to have the state operate insurance funds of various kinds. Several states, in fact, now sell compensation insurance covering accidents to workers, and in some cases the state maintains a monopoly of this form of indemnity while in others private companies compete with the commonwealth.

Politicians who bring about such interference with the economic function of private business do so for certain practical reasons and those who listen to the noisy advocates of the "sovereign state" should remember that such paternalistic individuals have a dull axe to grind. That portion of the unsuspicious public that falls for the promise of perfection in the guise of state or municipal ownership should ask themselves why politicians urge such methods so indefatigably. There is a clear answer: State operation supplies political pie in the form of funds for contracts to favored henchmen; it furnishes numerous jobs for those who help the machine to operate, and thus affords a means of building up a political organization to perpetuate itself. There are not many business men in politics but there are plenty of men who make politics a business.

Arts of the Theatre School Enjoys Successful First Session

By Maurice Browne

The first season of the Theatre of the Golden Bough ends this week, so it is fitting to take stock of the summer's work and see what may have been accomplished. Two facts stand out clearly; one is that the summer school has been what is popularly called a "success",—in other words that the enrollment was filled and, as a matter of fact, overfilled (a thing remarkable enough in itself in any dramatic school, let alone an "Art Theatre" school assembling for the first time), that the great majority of the students gave visible and audible indications of having a good time, and that some of them anyhow, and some of those who watched their work, seemed to think that the good time led somewhere.

The other fact which stands out clearly is that one positive aspect of that theatric policy which, as Mr. Kuster has so wisely said, will state itself in its own terms as it takes its own form in the Golden Bough, has already taken form and stated itself: the production of previously unacted plays. During the first ten weeks there will have been three premieres: Mr. Totheroh's "Princess Salome," Mr. Bloch's "The Princes Who Wouldn't Say Die" and my own "Mother of Gregory." It may be doubted if any other "new theatre" in the country, excepting, perhaps, the Provincetown Players, has started with such a record, and it is not beside the point that the only other play given so far in the Theatre has been one of the most significant among American contemporary realistic dramas and one for the most part new to Californians, O'Niell's "Beyond the Horizon." Nor is it beside the point that none of the three productions which have up to the present been given has lost money.

The variety of these four plays is also notable: the first, austere and formalized tragedy—a "ballad play;" the second, dramatic naturalism; the third, divine nonsense (or puerile asininity, according to the point of view!); while the forth is said to be colorful and imaginative romance; "with a message."

Furthermore, leaving concerts out of consideration, since they are outside the province of this summary, there have been several other programs, more or less dramatic, which to many have proved as interesting as the plays themselves: Mrs. Horst's and Miss Austin's lovely dance program; Miss Reicher's provocative and widely discussed work in the staging of poetry; Miss Van Volkenburg's "imitative interpretation" as she too modestly called it; giving no indication thereby of the spell she casts on her audience; and that exciting day when the School classes were thrown open to the public and three or four hundred people sat virtually all day long in the Theatre, evincing no apparent desire to go home even for meals. To many, that day must have been the high-watermark of the season; certainly many, I think, who had been unconvinced by Miss Reicher's first program, were that afternoon completely won over to her work with her students.

One other aspect of these two and a half months, which has been less noticeable perhaps to onlookers than to those actively engaged in the School, has been the fact that—except in "Beyond the Horizon," which was played by a visiting company—everything staged in the Theatre has been staged by these students themselves (under the supervision of the faculty)—scenery built, chairs and tables fashioned, textiles dyed, costumes designed and made, lighting (some of it beautiful and much of it difficult) devised and executed, and, incidentally, the stage, the auditorium, the work-shop, the lighting-booth and the dressing-rooms, kept with that cleanliness and order which should prevail in all theatres and prevails in few.

The faculty, I am able to state positively, is unanimous in feeling that the summer's work has resulted in growth, not only for the students but for the members of the faculty themeselves. Miss Van Volkenburg's "vowelizations," which are beginning to gain recognition all over the State for the extraordinary and radical educational results she achieves by their means, have entered a new and wider phase; Miss Reicher's poetry-staging has, as I have already said, converted even the sceptical among us, of whom, I frankly admit, I was one; and Mrs. Horst's work in rhythmics has begun definitely to achieve creative as well as interpretative values; while the enthusiasm of Miss Boganoff's students for her teaching, and their manifest irritation when, in her absence, the stage-craft classes were taken by myself (who had previously rashly thought that I knew something of stage-craft!), showed splendidly and clearly what her work meant to them.

The one criticism I would make as Director of the School is that hours have been too long. While it is hard to avoid this in so short a period as ten weeks, if anything that counts is to be accomplished, yet it is a demerit, and though one may make a virtue of it, one flatters oneself unduly in doing so. Another season, fewer programs and shorter hours should be arranged. The fault, this season, was mine.

It is a thrilling thing to see a large group of young artists and would-be artists buckling down to learn the rudiments of their craft; it is interesting to watch how some drop by the wayside; it has been encouraging to see how small a percentage has done so this summer. It is an extraordinary privilege—and a singularly grave responsibility—to have a finger in shaping the artistic destinies—and sometimes the lives—of members of the next generation in the Theatre. All that any of us can do who find ourselves in such a position is to follow the light as we see it, with consideration for others, but without flinching. And, if that light is a darkness, woe betide us who follow it—not those for whom we hold it aloft as a torch, since for them it will not shine. But, if that light emits any ray which can in any degree brighten the road for others, then no labor which can keep it burning or held upright is too great. Beauty is an abused word, but to serve it is the happiest and highest of human activities; and the most difficult.

I think that more people in Carmel realize now than did three months ago a thing which those of us who were not then Carmelites could perhaps more easily see—the deep debt which not only this little town, but the American theatre as a whole, owes to Edward Kuster.

Renaissance of "The Flying Dutchman"

I have had my first flying trip. Some people say there is nothing to it. How blase, how bored they must be. There's nothing to it, in being a bird? In riding the clouds like Donar, the God of thunder!

What a strange sensation it left me. I feel still "sky-high." I still feel the soft swinging movement of the machine (how awful a name for a living being). The golden wings with the silver strings made me feel a part of them, made me feel as if I myself were flying, on "Wings of Song." What rest, what ease, what gracefulness, gliding over the bright silver-sheeted bay, over the valley, with the toy-Mission, over the hills and over Carmel, which is not beautiful at all from that point of view.

Not a thought of fear enters my mind until suddenly, above the beach, the machine tips over; I see one wing disappear, feel myself hanging in my seat while the engine makes a sound like an angry beast, "That is the end," I say to myself. Heavens! and Pieter Hanna is coming tomorrow to clean the shop and he will not know where to find the key. And I have an appointment for luncheon on Tuesday and the people will be waiting for me. And in Holland they will say: "There was no reason at all for her to go flying... Why didn't she stay home and die in her bed like any other well-behaved Dutchman?"

Funny thoughts while one is confronting death. Then suddenly I realize we are landing. We were only making that graceful gliding movement I always admire while watching a flying machine from terra firma. I think the pilot could have warned me, don't you?

Alice in Wonderland Closes Outdoor Theater

The concluding performance of the Forest Theatre this season took place last Friday and Saturday nights, with a picturesque and interesting presentation of "Alice in Wonderland," dramatized by Perry Newberry, and produced by Arthur Cyril.

Due to the fact that this is the third time Alice has been given here, the audiences were small, and those who had already seen the play did not get the same thrill out of it as previously.

The individual roles were all splendidly enacted. Every kiddie and every grown-up did a conscientious and letter-perfect bit of character work.

Not the least interesting part of the two evening's performances was the music rendered by the Arts and Crafts orchestra.

CARMEL A MODERN TOWN

J. D. Farwell was an interested visitor at Carmel last week. Contrary to the accepted newspaper version of the community, he found that it was an up-to-date town—with paved streets, sidewalks, fire department, bank and even a newspaper. Newspapers have been in the habit of poking fun at Carmel, giving the impression that it was a freakish community due to the presence there of authors who are supposed to have many unique opinions on how a city should be run.—Los Gatos Mail-News.

Old California Play for Forest Theater

One of the interesting events proposed to be held during Serra Pilgrimage week, October 12 to 19, is the presentation of David Belasco's great California drama, "The Rose of the Rancho." The fine Spanish element of the play lends itself particularly to the atmosphere of the period that is to prevail here for the next two months. It is full of color and climax.

In the moving-picture version of the play much use was made of horses upon which the various characters came upon the scene. Our Forest Theater stage and surrounding grounds would readily permit of the employment of horses. The audience itself, attired in the dress of the period, would add a picturesque touch.

It is said that the leads will be played by Mrs. Marie Gordon and George Kegg. The producer has not yet been named.

FIFTY YEARS OF MAKE BELIEVE

Frederick Warde, the eminent Shakespearean actor, author and orator has another "half century" celebration to his credit, in which his family is joining him at his beautiful home "Wardesden" in the foothills of the Catskill Mountains. On August 10, 1874, Mr. Warde made his first appearance on the American stage as Captain Marston Pyke in an American play by Dion Boucicault, entitled "Belle Lamar," at Booth's Theatre, corner 23rd Street and 6th Avenue, New York City.

Warde, as a young man, evinced the same earnestness and sincerity in his chosen profession that has characterized his whole life. He won the hearts and praise of the New Yorkers on his first appearance, and during fifty years of close adherence to all that is best in dramatic life and literature has created a feeling of warm friendship and deep admiration in the bosoms of hosts of Americans all over the United States.

Mr. Warde's visit to Carmel last February, when he came here at the invitation of John B. Jordan, has not been forgotten and he will doubtless receive a very warm welcome when he returns this way in the winter.

Judge Joseph A. Bardin, who recently resigned from the superior bench of Monterey county, and Russell Scott, who has been connected with the Monterey County Abstract Company for several years, have opened their offices in the McDougal building in Salinas. Bardin made an enviable record as judge of this county during his ten years' service. He was in demand all over the state to handle difficult cases. Prior to becoming judge he served Monterey county as district attorney.

A suit for $200 was filed last week by H. E. Rogers of this city against Ray Ramsey of this city in Judge Michaelis' court of this city. Rogers alleges that due to Ramsey's negligent handling of a county highway repair truck which he was driving, the Rogers automobile was damaged on the Carmel road some time ago. Mrs. Rogers was driving the auto at the time of the accident.

The county musical association of Stanislaus has booked David Alberto for a concert in Modesto.

Mrs. Arthur Dunne, who is occupying the Wood cottage, has as guest her mother, Mrs. Robert McArthur.

The Mrs. Romaine Hunkins cottage on the Eighty-acre tract is about completed. M. J. Murphy was the builder.

Eugene Heffley, well-known eastern pianist, who has been sojourning at Carmel Highlands, has returned to New York.

The Stone cottage on Mountain View avenue is occupied by the Misses Mary and Nora Rigg of Pasadena. They will stay two weeks.

Charles King Van Riper and wife are planning to leave for the East next month, with no definite plans as to when they will return.

The friends and pupils of Mrs. Minna Steel Harper are looking forward to her home-coming. She will be here about September 1.

Grace Sartwell Mason, novelist and former Carmelite, who has been summering here, is at La Playa. She leaves shortly for the East.

Writing to friends here, Mrs. Maude C. Wyman and Helen Cheney Brown announce that they expect to arrive in Carmel in October. They are now in Europe.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert J. Comstock and son have returned from a month's vacation in Paso Robles. While away their home here was occupied by Mrs. S. J. Flannery of Yuba City.

His work of instruction at Stanford University completed, Dr. Herman A. Spoehr of the Carnegie Institution has returned to Carmel. Mrs. Spoehr and children will arrive from the East next week.

Dr. and Mrs. Carol Aronovici have as guest Miss Anne Brigman. Miss Brigman is an expert in photography, and will shortly bring out a book on the subject. Meantime we may have an exhibition of her pictures.

The Stevenson house in Monterey has been leased for a period of years to William and Edna Hart of San Francisco who plan to open it shortly as a tea room and artists' display gallery. The rooms where Stevenson wrote and worked will be kept open to the public.

Dr. and Mrs. Richard Kirkham, Miss Cherrill Kirkham and Miss Prendergast of San Francisco, are here for a short stay. The Kirkhams are busy with plans for the home they are to build on their property in the Eighty-acre tract.

Reverend Austin Chinn has returned with his family from a vacation at Red Bluff. Dr. Crittenden Van Wyck of Hayward, and wife, are at present guests at the Chinn home. Dr. Van Wyck is a brother of Mrs. Chinn and of Sidney Van Wyck, the attorney.

Anna Wright Hazen, who has been studying voice in New York under Marion Sims, has come to Carmel for the summer, and is accompanied by Miss Sims. They have taken the Diersen home on Carmelo. Miss Hazen has made great advances in her art recently and hopes soon to engage in concert work.

Chop Suey Saturdays and Sundays at Curtis'.

Mrs. Stanley Simonson of Merced, who expected to make a longer stay in Carmel, has returned to Merced, with her sister, Miss Olcese.

"Professor, How Could You!" Harry Leon Wilson's new novel, begins this week in George Horace Lorimer's Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. and Mrs. Jack Raggio and children of Stockton are in the Yates cottage on Carmelo. Mr. Raggio will return to Stockton this week-end.

Due to the prompt action of the Carmel fire department the F. S. Brown house in northwest Carmel is standing. A defective oil stove had a good start Thursday morning, and the chemical engine got into action just in time to save a valuable property from total destruction.

Clay M. Greene, the distinguished California playwright, his wife and Miss Virginia Fentress are this week's guests of Harry A. Greene in Monterey. Dan Totheroh's "Princess Salome," given at the Golden Bough, is the main reason for the Greenes' journey down from San Francisco.

Professor George P. Baker of Harvard, pioneer in the teaching of play construction, spent several days here last week with Mrs. Baker. They have been connected with the University of California summer school. Many Broadway successes are ascribed to students of Baker's 47 Workshop in Cambridge.

Visitors here last week-end from Hollywood were Robert N. Lee, adapter of Edward Everett Hale's "Man Without a Country," and Martin Johnson, art critic of a Chicago paper. They were guests of Mrs. Gertrude N. Andrews. Maurice Browne's production of "The Princess Who Wouldn't Say Die" interested them very much.

There should be a great increase in passenger traffic to and from Monterey now that C. O. Goold has placed in service the substantial new twenty-four passenger White auto bus. It is alone worth the price of the trip over the hill to ride in a vermillion-hued car such as this one. You've got to hand it to Charlie Goold for his promptness in putting on new rolling stock when it is needed.
